attention to everything is definitely one of the secrets to his phenomenal success at his eponymous line and now at the helm of Boss. And it's also the key to what fashion folks like to call "effortless chic." Those insanely stylish women who inspire us in our Instafeeds or on the red carpet? They do not wake up that way. Rather, they have cultivated looks they know work for them—the fit of jeans, that shade of matte lip stain, the just-right hair length—and they stick with 'em. Could you rattle off your own style go-tos? Or are you still on the elusive search for your perfect signature pieces? We've pulled together our annual "When Tastemakers Tell All..." (p. 135) so you can pick up a few insider tips and tricks from 10 of the most watchable stylistas we know. Once you've fine-tuned your own short list of what works for you, you'll save time, gain swagger, and, before you know it, perhaps become someone else's muse. That's no small detail!

Behind the Scenes

Exactly what went into the making of this month's issue

Coast of Utopia

P. 314 Le Palais Bulles, an architectural marvel on the French Riviera (and the longtime home of Pierre Cardin), was the backdrop for this year's Dior cruise presentation. The weather was so nice the next morning, we actually returned there with two of Raf Simons's swans, Teresa Palmer and Odeya Rush, to shoot our fashion feature "Just Like Heaven." The headline doesn't lie.

TICKET

Palmer and Rush (can you spot them at left?) took note of their faves. Palmer even went backstage to get a closer look.

> We had access to all 53 runway looks, but only six standouts made the story.

DOUBLE DIP

took a second to soak up the rays. Palmer's toddler son, Bodhi, also splashed around!

REPORTING

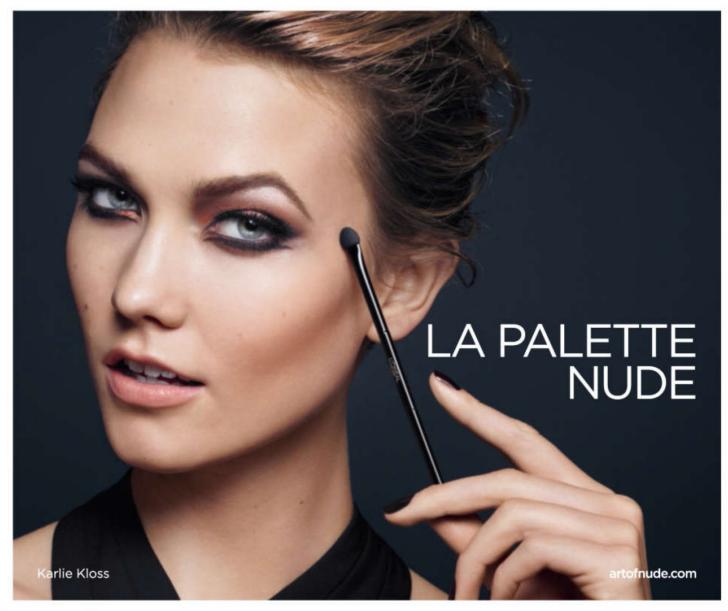

P. 306 While posing for "Daydreamer," actress Brit Marling raved about the chocolate chip cookies made by L.A. caterer Cooker. The secret to their gooey texture? Mixing in massive chocolate-bar chunks and underbaking each batch.

PROP STAR

P. 320 Can you say "hot wheels"? Bike lover Ryan Reynolds was psyched to tinker with the chopper we had on hand for "Full Throttle." It's a replica of the 1957 Triumph that Steve McQueen rode in the epic 1963 World War II film The Great Escape (inset).

MAKE A CHANGE

I was disappointed by the plus-sizeclothing selection in July's Great Style Has No Size. No woman who's larger than a size 10 would wear any of those skimpy outfits in her own home, let alone to the beach. It's bad enough that plus-size girls get only one page per issue that pertains to them. Please offer options with more coverage next time.

LADY IN RED

I've been a fan of Kate Mara ever since her stellar turn as a college cheerleader in We Are Marshall, and I loved seeing her wear the most gorgeous shades of red in June's "Mara x Mara" [below]. You can't help but notice her striking features against a stark white background.

WHERE TO FIND IT "This particular hue has very warm undertones, making it perfect for going from summer to cooler months," says Jessica Alba, who anchored her 83-piece beauty line for The Honest Company with a smoothing lip crayon in the tint. No parabens, synthetics, or silicones are included, and to top it off, a portion of proceeds will be donated to Girls Who Code, an organization that supports young women pursuing education in tech industries.

my birthday this year."

With the best-dressed man in music as her dad, Georgia May Jagger has the rock-star look in her blood. But after years of searching for the perfect leather jacket without (wait for it ...) satisfaction, she teamed with Mulberry to create her own capsule collection featuring jewel-toned linings and matching scarves. "I always wanted that look of Marlon Brando in The Wild One," she says. "These are like that: classic and full of attitude."

THEN

Jerrica Benton ran a record store and foster home. With the help of Synergy, a holographic synthesizer computer, a pair of special earrings, and the voice of Britta Phillips, she changed into pop superstar Jem.

Modern-day Jerrica reaches stardom the 21st-century way: via YouTube. The stylists at the film's record label Starlight Enterprises give her a makeover. "She becomes an iconic diva, like Lady Gaga or Katy Perry," says costume designer Soyon An.

A pink wrap dress and sharp shoulder pads made up Jem's signature ensemble. But it was those futuristic star earrings that had every '80s kid chirping, "It's show time, Synergy!'

An toughened up Jem's look with black leather, layers of chains, and a jacket customized with seven coats of pink paint. "She's a mix of '80s rock and roll and high-fashion glam," she says.

Jerrica wanted to be anonymous, so she used Synergy to disguise herself with puffy pink hair and fuchsia makeup.

Makeup artist Mary Klimek took a cue from Cyndi Lauper and David Bowie for Jem's look, relying on Stila's Magnificent Metals metallic eye shadows and PAX body paint. "We used so much glitter on set, I still have sparkle running through my veins," she joked.

Each episode featured three fully produced songs and music videos written by Barry Harman. It was the era of the working girl, and he injected comments on female empowerment into some songs. Titles included "She's Got the Power" and "We Can Change It."

Justin Bieber scout Scooter Braun produced the film's soundtrack, which is all original and sung by Peeples. "The songs represent the upbeat themes of the movie," says Peeples.

Her sister. Kimber, and foster sisters Aja and Shana were her bandmates in Jem and the Holograms.

Her three sisters return as her bandmates. "Their bond is a theme throughout," says Peeples. "Jem doesn't want fame but steps into the spotlight to support her family."

The Many Notes of Ariana

The 22-year-old pop star ARIANA GRANDE bottled up her favorite personality traits into her first fragrance, Ari. "It's sexy, playful, and sweet, just like me," she says. Here she explains the ingredients that make her spritz full of life.

Q So is it cool to call you Ari now?

My family calls me that. I wanted that to be the name because the fragrance is so personal. I wanted to give people a piece of me. This is really a statement that says, "Here I am!"

> Q You said you wanted this scent to be sexy, hence the notes of creamy musk and blond woods. When do you feel your sexiest?

> > Right before I do a show, when I'm getting into my costume and when I'm in it.

Q More so than when you're on the red carpet?

Well, I did feel so pretty in the white Versace dress

I wore to the Grammys this year [right]. But honestly? I feel my sexiest when I smell good. [Laughs.]

oz.: ulta.com.

Q How convenient! You represent your playful side in Ari with aromas like grapefruit and raspberry. IRL, where do you have the most fun?

Snapchat! [Her username is Moonlightbae.] I love taking candid, funny videos. There is no time to filter or edit—it's a way for me to directly connect to my fans. Though, I have to admit, I feel so hilariously awkward taking selfies. I pray people aren't watching.

Q You also wanted your fragrance to be sweet. The pear and marshmallow do the trick. What's the sweetest thing about you?

That's such a tough one. I guess that I'm such a romantic. I'm so traditional when it comes to that stuff. Love, for me, is laughter, respect, good conversation, genuine support, and more laughter.

Q Has anyone come close?

The last time someone did something sweet for me was when I received a lavender flower arrangement and a cryptic card. I eventually figured out what the message meant, and it was so rewarding.

Q Well, what did it mean, Ari?!? I'm not telling. It's a secret.

Ari shows off her many sides through her red-carpet choices. The petite powerhouse can pull off everything from leather to cat ears to full midiskirts with no problem.

Fashion designer Lela Rose has a side hustle. Two, actually: party planning and writing about it. To celebrate the launch of her new book, Prêt-a-Party, the entertaining ace dishes up tips on crafting a Pinterest-worthy place setting.

GET THE BAND BACK TOGETHER

"For outdoor dining, I use pinking shears to cut bellybands out of craft paper. I write the menu on the bands, then wrap them around the plates. When you bundle these together, you can simply pass around premade place settings rather than setting up plates, napkins, and cutlery individually."

GO AHEAD, GET PERSONAL

"Arrange baker's twine in the shape of the first letter of each guest's name on a solid-colored plate. This works just as well for little girls' birthday parties as it does for adult dinner parties."

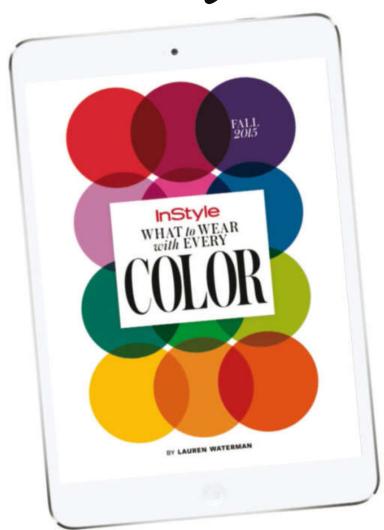

VEG OUT

"Try bringing an element from your centerpiece onto each place setting for a cohesive tabletop look. Here, the party theme was a pig roast and my centerpieces were fresh vegetables, so I placed one veggie, like a carrot, atop each guest's napkin."

ONE BOOK

If you're considering your options for treatment or know someone who is, this step-by-step guide, The New Generation Breast Cancer Book (Ballantine Books, $20; amazon.com), is essential reading. Below, a conversation with the author.

Q What motivated you to write this book?

A I was seeing so many women coming into my office inundated with information—much of it wrong and having nothing to do with their particular cases. There's a new landscape of information overload and a need for guidance that was not being met.

Q Any advice to someone with a friend who gets a breast cancer diagnosis?

A Coming along to see doctors if asked can be critical: A second pair of ears to hear what the specialists have to say, and to discuss options afterward, is so helpful to many. Those who undergo surgery may need assistance being driven to and from appointments and getting around.

Q You write that women with breast cancer should be optimistic about their prospects.

A Yes. The cure rate has never been better: It's approaching 90 percent overall. For the majority of newly diagnosed women, there is every reason to have hope that they will be just fine, even for those with more advanced cases.

Laudable

For the past two decades, Elizabeth Hurley has worked tirelessly for the Breast Cancer Awareness Campaign. The good news is, we're winning the battle against the disease. But the war is far from over lizabeth Hurley may play a British queen on E!'s The Royals, but the actress doesn't stand on ceremony. When I meet her on the set, she's still wearing a regal-red evening gown—under a dressing robe. Dishabille notwithstanding, she's a commanding presence, especially when discussing a subject she feels as strongly about as breast cancer: "Scientists tell us the only thing standing between today and the day when women stop dying from breast cancer is funding." Hurley is the global ambassador for the Estée Lauder Companies' Breast Cancer Awareness (BCA) Campaign, and her connection to the so-called emperor of all maladies is personal. Shortly before she joined Estée Lauder as a model in 1995, she lost a grandmother to breast cancer. Hurley's keen publicity instincts have been vital to her role in the crusade to help break the stubborn taboos surrounding this highly treatable illness.

You've been involved in the fight against cancer since the '90s. What has struck you the most? Twenty-one years ago, no one spoke of breast cancer. Women only whispered about it behind closed doors. When Evelyn [Lauder] approached me, she said, "These women are dying and nobody is talking about it. They are ashamed of having something in their breast." In 2010 we set a Guinness World Record for illuminating the most landmarks at once. We lit up 38 monuments in pink in 24 countries in 24 hours to bring attention to the cause. So a lot has changed since the early days.

What are some of the challenges that remain? Although in many countries there is now a great deal of awareness, in parts of the developing world the mere mention of cancer particularly breast cancer—is still anathema; you can't even put the word "breast" on a magazine cover. That's why awareness continues to be such an important component of the campaign.

Spreading the message is, I imagine, even more crucial with breast cancer because with early detection, the five-year relative survival rate is 99 percent. That's right. So while there's been an increase in the number of women diagnosed, it may be due in part to more getting mammograms, which is a good thing. Even better, the mortality rate has decreased 34 percent since 1990. But there's still a long way to go, so our work continues. —SAM BUNGEY

Famed for his luxuriously lyrical designs that have charmed countless women (and one First Lady), Wu threw us for a loop when he took on a second job at a label better known for its precise German engineering. Two years into the role, he has created a fresh image for the house, which shows once again how opposites attract

BY ERIC WILSON

BOSS Ladies

Rarely anyone on the red carpet (besides tuxedoed men) had uttered the name Hugo Boss until Wu brought his celebrated touch to streamlined gowns and sequined skirts. Now just about everyone

JASON WU ON THE RECORD

As the first artistic director for Boss womenswear, the designer is pushing his tailoring skills to the max.

Q You always set big challenges for yourself. So what is your mission at Boss?

A There has always been something intrinsic to the Hugo Boss look for men that is concrete and very steely, yet the women's collection, which hasn't been around as long, didn't have a clear point of view. The idea is to create an identity within that masculine and linear world that a woman can relate to as well.

Q Men think of Boss as a great place to buy suits for work. What about women's clothing?

A Suits are where the company has seen the most success, but in today's world I don't think it's so black and white. Suits aren't the only option in the workplace anymore. There's a huge opportunity to not only update what the company does in terms of classics—I made a collection of the perfect black, gray, and navy suits called the Fundamentals—but also to take the ideals of tailoring and make them into something more interesting to look at: fashion.

Q What's driving that shift? A Look at someone like Michelle Obama [above, in Jason Wu], who has changed the way women in politics dress. Before her, feminine dresses and anything with a little sex appeal were kind of taboo. It's hard to imagine in this day and age, but

Work Force

When reinventing an office look, Wu's mantra is never overdress. "Subtle details are always better than loud flourishes," he says.

"Bonded gray flannel with a pop of red gives an industrial feeling."

"A structured jacket can look old. This is more like a riding coat meets a modern suit. There's something quite Berlinesque about model Edie Campbell's whole look."

"Laser-cut pieces are assembled like a puzzle for tailoring with an architectural touch."

Artistic Expressions

The geometric shapes and industrial aesthetics of the Bauhaus movement have been an important influence for Wu at Boss, so the German company is sponsoring a major exhibition on the subject at the Vitra Design Museum (above) in Weil am Rhein through February 28, 2016. These themes will be reflected in Boss store installations worldwide.

Boy Toys

Wu's first bag design, the Bespoke, gives a sly nod to Boss's menswear heritage. "The turn lock is inspired by a cuff link," he says. "You don't want to be overwhelmed by the men's DNA."

Calf-hair bag with calfskin trim, $1,795; at Hugo Boss.

like lawyers or CEOs, did not feel comfortable wearing such things. You had to be a little unsexy, or frumpy. But that's the old way of looking at it.

Q What do you propose for a woman who still wants to project authority?

A There should be a sense of ownership with the designs. I wanted to show both strength and sensuality, but not overt sexuality in a way that is inappropriate. This can be conveyed just as well with a dress or a coat by how polished it is.

Q There's a reason they call the label Boss, right?

A It's quite sharp, just the sound of the name. How to translate the idea of power and still have fragility and femininity is really important for the future of womenswear.

Q What has been your biggest hit so far?

A Definitely the flats, starting with the patent loafers from the first show, which actually were made for the first time in our own men's factories using that incredible craftsmanship, only transformed for women. You don't have to wear heels to look well put together, so we've made new versions of flats and boots for fall and resort.

Q Were you ever not your own boss?

A I worked in toys first, designing dolls [the Fashion Royalty line for Integrity Toys]. My boss was Percy Newsum, the president of the company.

Q What lessons did he teach you?

A I learned that it's always about the details. Working in miniatures, like fashion, is about paying attention to everything you touch.

Alexandra Hoffnung & Sarah Watson

NET-A-PORTER

THEIR STORY "I have a geek brain, but I really wanted to work in fashion magazines," says Sarah Watson (above, right) of her route to becoming vice president for social commerce at Net-a-Porter. She and Alexandra Hoffnung, the department's creative director, just launched the site's first social shopping app, the Net

> Set, which has been downloaded more than 80,000 times and makes it a breeze to see who else is buying Chloé and what Poppy Delevingne is eyeing. "We were so keen to crack how to shop from a social network," Watson says. "We jumped at the chance."

THEIR ADVICE The duo, mentored by site founder Natalie Massenet, believe teamwork fosters the best results. "Often the job you want does not exist," Hoffnung says. "So you have to create it. We knew we were the right people for the position."

Jodie Fox SHOES OF PREY

HER STORY Jodie Fox has a vivid memory, from age 4, of her mother trying on pumps with lightning bolts on the sides. "I thought they were the coolest things I had ever seen," she says. Never satisfied with off-the-rack heels since, Fox decided six years ago to start a site where customers can build their own styles. Five million designs later (with six new shops opened with Nordstrom), Fox is now looking for new ways to expand the custom economy. "This industry is ripe for disruption," she says. "We have so many extraordinary designers, but we force them to make 10,000 of one thing before they even sell a shirt or a jacket."

HER ADVICE "We need more technologists with fashion savvy," she says. In fact, the majority of her employees are women, recruited from her customers. "If you see someone doing your dream job, pick up the phone and learn from them. A lot of people have been generous with their time, and I have honored that generosity by not wasting it."

Stephanie Horton FARFETCH

HER STORY Stephanie Horton was working in marketing when she was introduced to Shopbop, "and it opened my eyes that there was life in fashion beyond a magazine," she says. Now the chief marketing officer at Farfetch, which gathers goodies from luxury boutiques around the globe, she travels from her new home in London to Asia and the Middle East to handle the site's partnerships and PR. "I love learning about other cultures," she says. "And learning how they shop is the most interesting thing."

HER ADVICE "Keep your options open," Horton says. "A lot of people get scared away from tech because they think it means you have to be a programmer. You can work in merchandising, marketing, even human resources." Of her own transition from print, she says, "Once you understand the language, it's basically transferring your skills from one place to another."

HER STORY Zady, the site Maxine Bédat co-founded with Soraya Darabi, has been called the Whole Foods of fashion for its focus on highlighting sustainable products for conscious consumers. A former diplomat, Bédat wanted to tell the stories of how things are made—including her own designs (the oft-sold-out .01 sweater was a hit for its tuck-stitch pattern), which will expand into a full Zady collection this fall.

HER ADVICE "I grew up really, really shy," Bédat says. "But I didn't want my own hang-ups to keep these things from existing in the world. Put yourself out there and keep trying, because eventually it will work."

Rie Yano & Jie Zheng MATERIAL WRLD

THEIR STORY Classmates at Harvard Business School, Rie Yano (far left) and Jie Zheng first worked for the digital departments of Coach and J. Crew, respectively. "We were making it easier for customers to shop for new clothing with the click of a button, and yet cleaning out our closets still felt like a huge hassle," Yano says. Their solution: a site that trades gift cards for used designer duds.

Comfy jersey pieces by Bassike are my go-to's while traveling. When I'm on a plane with my four kids, I love that the material doesn't wrinkle. Cotton and polyester sweatshirt, Bassike, $220; bassike.com.

STYLE MUSINGS

Best fashion advice?

If you want to save money, wait for ethically made goods to go on sale rather than buying cheap pieces. When something is super-inexpensive, it likely means that the person who made it wasn't paid fairly.

Tip you've picked up since becoming a mom? I'm often discovering useful products through my kids, like Traumeel Ointment ($28; amazon.com). It's meant to help bruises heal, but I dab it anywhere I want to decrease puffiness.

Closet mantra? Organize by color, not style. It seems counterintuitive, but it's easier to find things.

What's your fashion philosophy? Take risks, and try new things.

Best source of inspiration? Instagram. I love how you can see trends as they are happening. When I come across something I like on my feed, I take a screen shot and save it in a separate folder on my phone.

Tips for posting photos of yourself? If you're trying to get your full outfit in the shot, pose sitting down. You'll be able to get a closer angle and still see your shoes in the frame.

Any good editing tricks? I use the Afterlight app ($1; available on iTunes) to brighten up and add contrast to my photos before I share them with my followers.

What inspires you? A lot of our designs are informed by our travels, like our recent trip to Hong Kong and Tokyo.

Favorite combo?

Masculine shoes with a clean-cut, feminine dress. In the past we've put sneakers on the women in our runway shows. We wanted the models to feel comfortable physically and aesthetically, and we ended up loving the contrast.

Tip for finding your perfect fit? Have your clothing tailored starting with the shoulder. If a garment fits you correctly in the shoulder, the whole piece will hang better.

The best way to organize your clothes? Here's what we do in the showroom: keep the strongest pieces—the key looks—at arm's length. Have those outfits grouped together on hangers, fully accessorized, so that you always have something amazing ready to put on.

Your Weekly Checkup

You can keep filtering your selfies—or you can slough off the dead cells that are dulling your glow. Dermatologists say that in addition to your daily regimen, you may want to do a deeper exfoliation twice a week. For an extra boost, treat yourself to a mask once a week.

MASTER THE ART OF FACE MASSAGE

Your back isn't the only spot that benefits from a little kneading. Face massage spurs circulation and deflates puffiness, says Charlotte Cho, aesthetician and founder of Korean e-shop Sokoglam.com. She explains the ritual in her manual, The Little Book of Skincare ($25; littlebookofskincare.com). Gently push up from under cheeks with knuckles (or with a tool like Sarah Chapman's), moving up the sides of your nose to the forehead, then down the perimeter of your face. Press under eyes, from nose to temples. Bonus: It relieves stress and anxiety by "reducing proinflammatory molecules like cortisol," says N.Y.C. dermatologist and psychiatrist Amy Wechsler.

FOR OILY HAIR To nix grease but deliver moisture where you need it, apply shampoo to your scalp and conditioner to ends. Lather, then rinse out both at once, says stylist Rubi Jones, author of The Art of Hair (Weldon Owen, $11; amazon.com).

DETANGLE IN THE SHOWER "After washing their hair, some people spend five to 10 minutes just trying to unravel the knots," says N.Y.C. stylist Sarah Potempa. To avoid this time suck, she suggests detangling while the conditioner is still on strands. This moisturizing formula provides slip, so you can get a comb through hair faster without breakage. Having a Good Hair Day? Let's Keep It That Way Heads up: Your strands change over time (just like your reaction to getting carded). But there are plenty of measures you can take along the way to make sure they stay in shape—and in place Excess is the source of many problems in youth, including lackluster hair. "Heat styling, coloring, and chemical treatments create weak, unhealthy hair,' says N.Y.C. dermatologist Francesca Fusco. Mist with a heat protectant before lifting an iron to prevent dulling damage. Though you may want to milk your blowouts, wash hair every few days: "Product residue plus too much sebum can clog the scalp and lead to inflammation, which can result in hair loss," says N.Y.C. dermatologist and hair-restoration surgeon Richard Mizuguchi.

Fekkai Blowout Primer, $20; fekkai.com. Clear Scalp & Hair Active Damage Resist Shampoo,

Whether you've recently been pregnant or you're planning to expand your family, you'll likely lose some strands. "After childbirth, estrogen levels drop, causing your hairgrowth cycle to go into rest phase," says N.Y.C. dermatologist Michael Reed, who specializes in hair-loss issues. It can take a year to recover, so disguise thinning with a tinted keratin powder that clings to hair. While nothing kick-starts growth like topical minoxidil, an FDA-approved over-thecounter hair-loss treatment, a study this year found that applying rosemary oil can be effective as a stimulant.

Toppik Hair Building Fibers, $25; toppik.com. Weleda Rosemary Hair Oil, $17; usa.weleda.com.

With graying, hair develops a rougher feel. "Your sebaceous glands secrete less as you age, resulting in a dry, wiry finish," says Dr. Fusco. To soften the texture, moisturize like mad. "Use a conditioner with lots of humectants, like coconut oil, from scalp to ends to fully rehydrate." When those white strands begin to sprout, a few hits of pigment spray will conceal roots until your next shampoo.

Groh Ergo Boost Hair & Scalp Conditioning Treatment, $59; mygroh.com. Marc Anthony True Professional Bye Bye Gray Root Touch Up Spray, $10; drugstore.com.

As estrogen levels dip, hair loss becomes more noticeable. Five percent minoxidil (like in Women's Rogaine) has been shown to increase hair growth in multiple studies. Although it requires time and patience to see results (think up to six months), it's among the most research-backed, doctorrecommended options available—just consult your dermatologist first. Are you overbooking salon appointments to mask grays? Embrace your silver-fox status and swap your normal shampoo for one with a violet hue to neutralize yellowing. The hair-boosting HELMET!

WHAT IT IS An FDA-cleared at-home hair-growth device fitted with LEDs and red lights. HOW IT WORKS Low Level Light Therapy switches follicles into "on" mode (the growth, or anagen phase), leading to thicker hair and new strands. Similar handheld devices, like the HairMax LaserComb ($295; hairmax.com), have been on the market for years, but with the iGrow, you can pop it on your head and scroll through Instagram while it does its thing. The brand recommends wearing it four times a week for 25 minutes per session. After about 16 weeks, you begin the maintenance phase of once-a-week sessions. THE RESULTS In company-funded, third-party-conducted clinical studies with 91 participants, the company reports that iGrow showed increased hair counts of more than 37 percent in women and 35 percent in men, after 16 weeks of use. The main obstacle is sticking with a regular schedule, says Dr. Fusco. "There's a high rate of noncompliance with tools like these," she says. "But if you use them, they can be really effective." DOWNTIME None. PAIN FACTOR Zero—it doesn't even emit heat. FOR MORE INFO Check out igrowlaser.com and talk to a doctor before beginning.

BEAUTY TALK Chrissy Teigen

The outspoken model and star of the new daytime show The F.A.B. sounds off on hair extensions, socialmedia fakers, and Botox boldness

When did you start wearing makeup? In high school. I was a cheerleader, and we would get dolled up for the games, but I never wore it to school. I started experimenting soon after. And how did that work out? For some reason I decided to take off all my brows. I thought that was a cool thing. I also had color contacts and looked like the girl from Memoirs of a Geisha: the very rare Asian with blue eyes. I tried acrylic nails too, with thick white French tips. Not so cute.

How would you describe your look now? I'm still figuring it out. I'm horrible at doing my own makeup. It's always been scary to me. Not as scary as hair. There's no disguising that.

But you've done a lot with your hair—bangs, side braids ... That's because I let creative people be creative. When I sit in the chair, I just say, "Do whatever you want." If it's just me, it's a topknot.

Let's talk body. What's more important to you: working out or eating well?

For me, it's 90 percent diet. No matter how much I work out, it doesn't really do anything for me shapewise. My body goes up and down. A low-carb, high-protein approach is the only thing that's really worked for me.

You've been critical of women who alter images on social media. It's just this unfair standard when everybody looks so over-the-top Photoshopped. It's ridiculous. The ones who are helping the cause are those who are showing their real selves. People respond to honesty more than to any kind of mystery or trickery. Any opinions on cosmetic surgery or Botox? I don't care what people do, but I think they should be more honest about it. I promise you a lot more women do it than you would ever think. Would you consider doing it? Definitely—1,000 percent. I haven't yet, but when I do, I won't have a problem saying I did. —KAHLANA BARFIELD

FAUX REAL

Some impressively tressed women stay silent on the extent of their hair extensions. Not Teigen. "I'm addicted to them," she says. "If I took them out, my pony would be nonexistent." We love how she keeps it real—even when her hair isn't.

"Juan Carlos at Rita Hazan Salon did my hair here. He was known for doing J.Lo's. This was when I realized my hair could be full with body and volume."

"Yeah, this was a complete fail. I liked my hair at the time, but looking back, it just seems a bit too Great Gatsby. No, no, no. You live and you learn."

"This I love. It was the first time I chopped my hair, and I was so nervous because I wasn't really ready to take the risk. I think the Grammys were the next day."

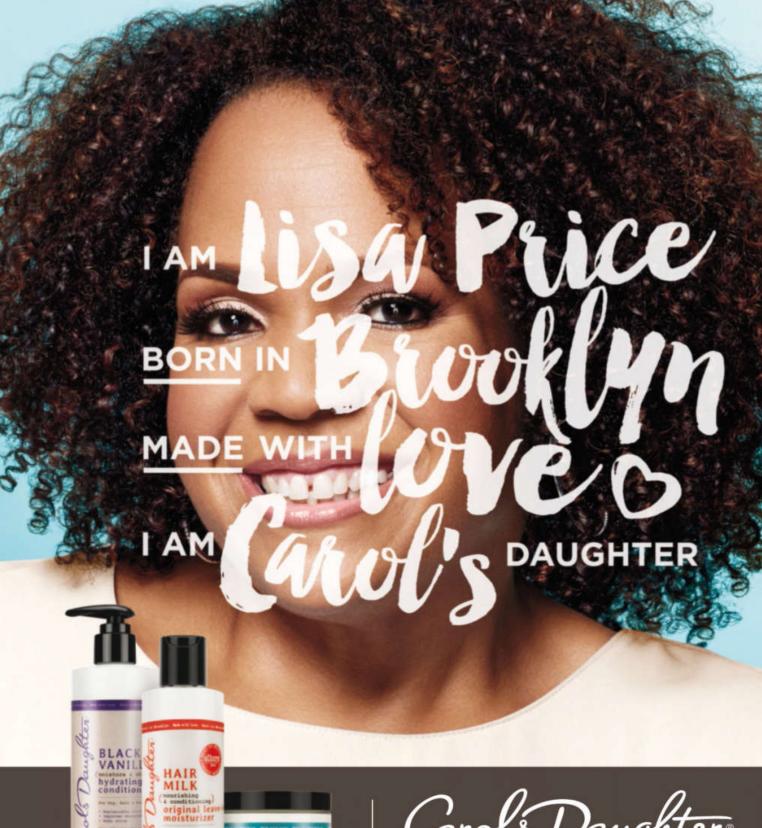

"It was 100 degrees in L.A. and I sweat a lot, so I needed my hair off my shoulders. Giannandrea did this pony. His ponies rival all ponies on the planet."

10 WAYS TO

Make Over Your Smile

Stick to (Supersize)

Because dentists can use much higher levels of hydrogen peroxide, the speediest whitening results are still offered in-office. But at home, pros agree: Crest Whitestrips are the pearly standard. They consistently pay off, says L.A. dentist Kourosh Maddahi. The newest ones are longer, so two strips can lift stains on every tooth in a single use.

Swish

Traditional mouthwashes contain alcohol that wipes out bad bacteria (yay!), but it also eliminates good microbes that are essential to our overall oral health. Preferable? Treating your mouth with sea-saltspiked H₂O, which has been recognized as a successful preventive measure against periodontal disease. "By fighting the development of gingivitis and plaque, it also wards off the yellowing of teeth," says Dr. Maddahi. Mix one teaspoon of salt with a cup of water and rinse for a minute each day.

BEAUTY 10 WAYS TO

No surprise here—your caffeine fix can leave a mark on your smile. "Coffee creates yellow stains, and even green tea can impart a grayish cast," says Dr. Maddahi. Instead of sipping through a straw (which, admit it, is awkward with a hot bev), drink through a vented lid. Doing this reduces the amount of contact the liquid has with your teeth, he says.

Floss

Floss on the Fly

Sure, it's one of life's less joyful activities, but it's really important: Flossing gets rid of the darkening plaque and tartar resting in between teeth, which your toothbrush can't reach, says Dr. Lieb. But before you grab that same old spool of string, consider the new GUM Soft-Picks, which are "curved so they can get through the cracks more easily, and they even help clean out molars," she says. Plus, their pipe cleaner-like tips are supergentle. Make it a twice-a-day habit; it's key in preventing gum disease.

Oil Up
An ancient ayurvedic ritual favored by stars like Gwyneth Paltrow, oil-pulling involves swishing a tablespoon of antimicrobial liquid, such as coconut oil, in your mouth to "remove bacteria, like Streptococcus mutans," says N.Y.C. dentist Brian Kantor. This not only cuts down on inflammation but also "decreases tooth-darkening gingivitis and plaque." To reap the biggest benefit, try to keep the oil in your mouth for 20 minutes. You can do this a few times a week or even daily, says Dr. Kantor.

HALLE BERRY

She may play an astronaut on the sci-fi series Extant, but offscreen the actress is equally out of this world. "She's a unicorn," says makeup pro Fiona Stiles. "As she gets older, she looks younger." Part of the reason for her Benjamin Button-ing? "She doesn't hide behind foundation," says Stiles, "and she knows what works." The Revlon ambassador loves smoking up her eyes, sometimes with grays since black can be severe. "Sultry eyes are flattering, and she rolls with it."

"I gave her a pixie cut 23 years ago, and it became iconic. She's recently been rocking beachy waves with golden highlights. We have to change her hair for roles and take her look to a different place so that when she's on camera, people see the character, not Halle Berry." —NEEKO, hairstylist

YOU CAN DO BRIGHT Red Lips

It's surprisingly easy to master the look. Just follow this insider advice from Executive Editor

Amy Synnott

- 1 It's the salted caramel on top of any outfit. You could literally wear head-to-toe black every day (and trust me, I know many fashion girls who do), and as long as you've got a major lip on, you'll pass for chic. In my opinion, a strong red looks best when you don't have a million other colors in your outfit (think three, tops, with red being one of them).
- 2 Even the most luxe lipstick costs less than almost any other accessory. Whether you drop $2 (yes, NYC New York Color Expert Last Lip Color!) or $36 (Chanel Rouge Coco), you will get tons of bang for your bullet.
- 3 It saves time. Think like a fashion blogger: All you really need is a hat, cool sunnies, and a bold red lip and you're good to go.

THE SHINE FACTOR

Once you've exfoliated your lips (stock up on extra-soft toothbrushes) and primed them with concealer (this neutralizes your natural lip color and helps lipstick stay on longer), it's time to paint. Here's how to pick the perfect finish.

Matte

Are your lips as smooth as a baby's tush? If not, don't even think of trying this sophisticated but tricky texture at home. Matte shades deliver loads of pigment but are challenging to apply without a brush (and a steady hand). Since dry finishes can look flat, one way to add depth is to layer a bright pencil under a darker lipstick as Sienna Miller did here.

Charlotte Tilbury Matte Revolution Lipstick in Red Carpet Red ($32) and Lip Cheat in Kiss 'N' Tell ($22); charlottetilbury.com.

Creamy

A nice halfway point between matte and glossy, satiny lipsticks are typically the most wearable and popular for a reason: They bring on the color and a healthy dose of hydration. Though they don't last quite as long as their matte counterparts, they are easy enough to apply straight from the bullet (even if you've just pounded a Starbucks Venti Quad).

Estée Lauder Pure Color Envy Sculpting Lipstick in Carnal, $30; esteelauder.com.

Shiny

Our beauty director, Angelique Serrano, calls this finish "red lipstick training wheels." Why? A glossy texture usually makes the pigment sheerer, so it's simpler to put on and less intense in its coverage. If you are normally a gloss girl, this is a good place to start your red lip odyssey. Not for nothing: It's also super-sexy (see Naomi Campbell, above). Burberry Kisses Rose Blush

You might not be coloring in the right place. "To get the most uplifting effect, put blush on the apples of your cheeks," says L.A. makeup artist Molly Stern, who counts Reese Witherspoon as a regular. And them apples are higher up than you think: "The blush shouldn't be all that far from your undereye concealer." Makeup pro Carola Gonzalez, who works with Kerry Washington, takes a mathematical approach. "Apply blush about an inch below your eye and an inch from your nose, and then brush it up toward your temples," she says. And—this cannot be overstated—use a light hand to look rosy, not rashy.

I'm seeing so many "cushion compacts." How do they differ from regular foundation compacts?

Cushion compacts, the latest Korean-led beauty craze, are usually filled with formulas not unlike BB creams (i.e., lightweight, tinted, and packed with antioxidants and SPF). It's their delivery system that's unique. The formula is typically concentrated either inside a sponge or under a mesh screen. When tapped with the enclosed face pad, both dispense just enough product to give you a perfectly sheer dose of coverage, so you can conceal imperfections without caking up your complexion.

Our tester says If you're scrolling through Pinterest, just waiting for inspiration to strike, book a slot at Civello, where stylists are eager to consult with you and create a highly personalized cut. Consider our tester: She met with her pro and detailed her conservative streak—explaining that she didn't want to lose more than 1 inch of her fine, wavy hair but also needed a solution to control its tendency to mushroom out around the ends. They then sorted through visuals on a laptop. "We talked about my morning routine and styling habits to nail down a shape that would work," she says. Her stylist was careful to pinpoint the start of split ends before snipping them off with scissors, slicing into ends to finish the clean-up job. Using a flatiron to refine her soft

Our tester says This Upper East Side salon of skilled stylist Paul Labrecque reveals itself as you head up a central staircase to large, bustling workstations lined with full-length mirrors. Our tester's visit got off to an "incredibly stress-relieving" start in the private room reserved for the new 90-minute C-Zen Scalp Massage treatment with mint and citrus oils that stimulate the scalp and deeply hydrate strands. (Our tester says her hair was "smoother, shinier, and completely immune to frizz" for almost two weeks) Next up was a consultation with Labrecque himself to assess our reporter's "grown-out, shapeless layers with frayed, bleached-blond ends." No worries, promised Labrecque, who charmingly chatted away about summer vacation destinations as he snipped off inches of wet hair to create fresh faceframing layers. (He lifted sections vertically before cutting across and then into ends.) But to our tester, the best was yet to come: "He gave me the most amazing blowout I've ever had," she says. The secret, according to Labrecque, is a supersmall, round brush. Most stylists use wider barrels, he says, but a small one is the trick to long-lasting volume in fine hair.

SPOKE & WEAL SALON

850 Greenwich St. 415-800-7440

Our tester says Located in a quaint residential corner near North Beach, this salon, with its hardwood floors, white walls, and a sleepy French bulldog in the corner, feels homey yet uncluttered. We suggest you put yourself in good hands for both a cut and color with master stylist Christy Dylo and colorist Teddy Greene. Thanks to the salon's dry-cut emphasis, your shade upgrade comes first, with Greene mixing a custom dye after a consultation (in our tester's case, a talk about a handpainted balayage approach). The Aveda stylists took our reporter from long and straight with faded highlights to a more layered look with shorter bangs and a color that mixed sun-catching highlights with darker, more intensely dyed ends.

IAN MCCABE STUDIO

1101 23rd St., N.W. 202-888-6700

Our tester says In a soothing space painted in grays and white, with earthy touches such as tree-trunk stools and animal-hide rugs, celebrity colorist Ian McCabe and his team of pros work amid loads of natural light to craft the salon's signature dry cuts. Showing up for a "corrective" cut to remedy an uneven two-tier chop (if not quite helmet head. think longer in the back, too short on the front and sides), our tester settled in for her wash and scalp massage before meeting with Neven Radovic (he's styled the hair of Claire Danes and Debra Messing) to discuss his fix. After taking up the back to about chin-length, Radovic worked strand by strand to blend it with the sides, adding in some much-needed flow before addressing the asymmetry in front. Our tester described the process as relaxed yet focused, with Radovic spending more than an hour to deliver a highly appreciated crop.

Boston

SALON EVA MICHELLE

118 Newbury St., Second Floor 617-262-8118

Our tester says If, like our tester, you fear seeing a new colorist "more than going to the dentist," co-founder and master colorist Eva Mustafai can put your mind at ease in her black-and-white salon that features lots of chrome and leather. Her manner is reassuring and her technique painstaking: She doesn't lift a brush before sending clients to the sink for a clarifying shampoo to get rid of product buildup. She then paints dye on strands, paying special attention to coat new growth around the hairline, which, she explains, doesn't take color in the same way as the ends do. Our tester transformed from a reddish brown to a cooler chestnut with subtle gold streaks. While getting there took three stages—a single process to the roots, highlights, and a semipermanent color applied overall to obtain the glossiness Mustafai is known for achieving—our once nervous tester left feeling "like a regular."

PARIOUR

2600 Woodburn Ave. 513-961-4247

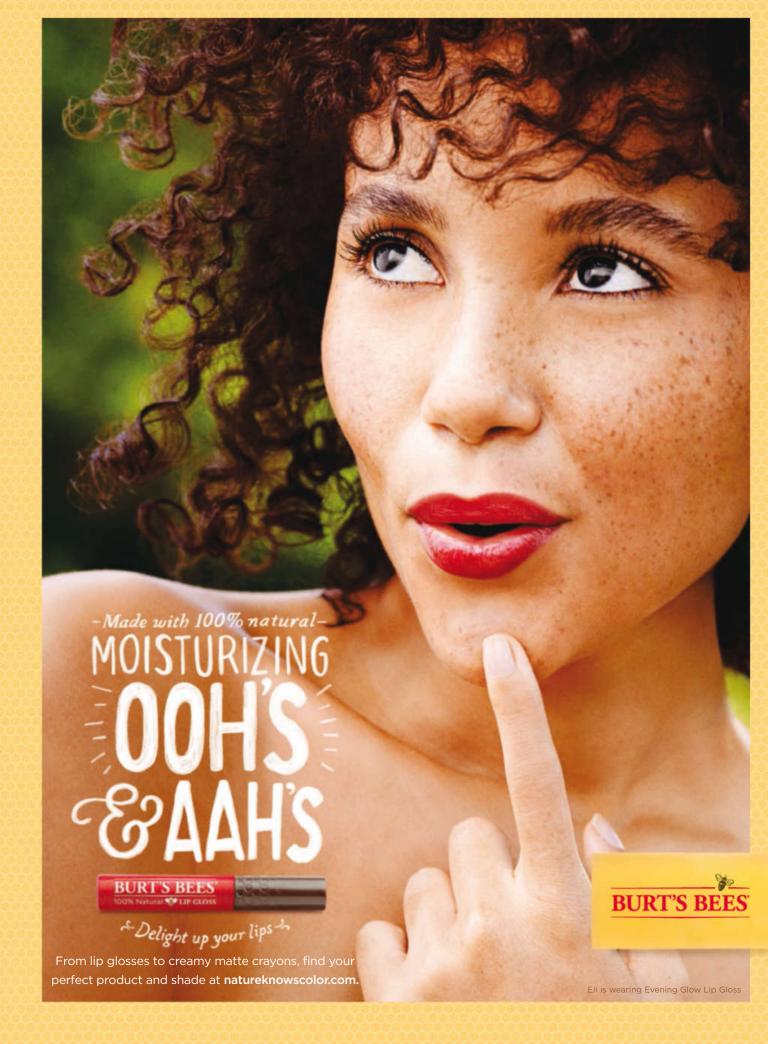

Our tester says Staffers instantly win you over with a free cocktail at the start of your service. And here, even the drinks have a personalized touch—they're concocted by the chef at a local pop-up restaurant and include such unexpected creations as "grilled lemonade," which earns rave reviews. Owner Jessie Hoffman's work is just as artful; she began our tester's treatment with a scroll through an iPad for the kind of hue that would successfully boost her too-dark brown. Opting for an almond base with golden-brown highlights and a subtle ombré effect overall, our tester got a tension-zapping scalp massage before Hoffman got busy with ammonia-free Davines products to craft the light-catching look. Also to love? The salon's smart blow-dry policy: A 10-minute blowout (when heading home for takeout and Netflix) comes with every color treatment; you can pay $15 more for the kind that will wow for a bigger night out.

GODDARD + BRAGG SALON

656 N. Robertson Blvd. 310-321-4035

Our tester says Tucked off West Hollywood's bustling Robertson Boulevard, this jewel box sports an edgy palette of blacks and grays with pops of Lucite and gold ("a modern kickback to Halston," as colorist and co-owner Lorri Goddard describes it). Known as Hollywood's "blonde whisperer," Goddard has a roster of honey-hued clients including Jennifer Lawrence, Reese Witherspoon, and Kim Kardashian, whom she famously took from raven to platinum earlier this year. To bring our tester's virgin black locks toward Jamie Chunglike highlights, Goddard got to work using her trademark "foilayage" technique—a combo of handpainted balayage highlights up top, foils underneath, and a misting of grapefruit-infused essence water to help blend the hues. She skipped the traditional blowout and hand-diffused each section. Adding a translucent gloss to temper brassiness, Goddard achieved gorgeous "back from Bali" streaks for our thrilled tester.

NINE ZERO ONE SALON

8469 Melrose Place 310-855-9099

Our tester says The brand's new Melrose Place salon peppers its minimalist décor with luxe touches, like gilded salon chair pedestals and a marble reception desk. To change up her natural "dusty light brown" hair, our tester saw Florido, who's worked with Justin Bieber. For the "sun-kissed" refresh she craved, Florido recommended a subtle dose of golden color from about cheekbone level to tips, which he handpainted onto slim swatches of hair. A swift rinse-out and two golden toners later, the summery ombré effect perfectly suited our tester's natural base—and looked more like she'd spent a week at a beach than an hour at the salon. Using Unite Leave-in Detangler, Florido nailed perfectly boho beach waves, a style in high demand at this California-cool salon, where other stylists have worked on clients like Julianne Hough and Heidi Klum.

IGK SALON AT THE DREAM DOWNTOWN HOTEL

355 W. 16th St. 646-625-4844

Our tester says At the small, sexy salon inside the Dream hotel, hip celebrity and runway stylists snip away as guests stream past the tall windows on their way to the PHD club rooftop. InStyle's assistant art director arrived looking for an understated upgrade: honey highlights for her virgin brown hair. Colorist Jenny Rey handpainted what she calls an Irish coffeecolored balayage, blending new streaks seamlessly into our reporter's light brown base for a sun-lit lift that doesn't require monthly maintenance. Afterward owner Aaron Grenia (one of three stylist owners, whose clients include Ciara and Donna Karan) turned up the heat for a silky blow-dry.

SHARON DORRAM COLOR AT SALLY HERSHBERGER

17 E. 71st St. 212-535-3519

Our tester says Are you within driving distance of Manhattan? Are you a brunette? Then you need to stop right now and make a date to see master colorist Sophie Georgiou. "I hadn't colored my hair in almost a year," says our tester. "My naturally dark brown hair had grown in and was down to my chin; my overblonded ends covered my shoulders in a strawlike curtain." While our tester entered the three-floor salon wanting a refresh of her blond highlights for the summer months, Georgiou sweetly suggested another direction: an array of rich, elegant light brown streaks, which she assured our reporter would look so much better against her light olive skin. In under two hours, "I got such a makeover," says our tester. "My hair looked so expensive. It was a luxe shade of cocoa that reflected light and brightened my face."

MASSAGES

REMÈDE SPA AT THE ST. REGIS ASPEN RESORT

315 E. Dean St. 970-920-3300

Our tester says Redecorated last fall with a low-lit, gilded cabin vibe, this much-awarded spa makes a luxe, calming setting for an après-ski rubdown, customized to target each client's trouble spots. Our tester's "strong and therapeutic" massage incorporated several techniques (from Swedish to deep-tissue), leaving no tendon untouched. Attention was given to the face (our tester's favorite moment), scalp (including a Moroccanoil hair treatment), and feet (with a paraffin wrap), so our reporter left with noticeably hydrated skin, which, she says, is "exactly what you need in Aspen's exceedingly dry climate." Treatments include access to the spa's Oxygen Lounge and waterfall pool, so pack a suit and stay a while. Regular price: $195 for

ТОМОКО SPA

141 S. Beverly Dr. 310-205-7300

Our tester says A little slice of Tokyo in the heart of Beverly Hills, Tomoko Spa offers sublime massages and body treatments in four private suites. Enter the pristine, elegant space and trade your shoes for zori, wooden Japanese slippers, then head to the spotless lounge to get treated to oshi buri (hot towels), brown rice tea, and chocolate-orange truffles. In the couples' suite with adjacent beds and a hinoki cypress bathtub, the zen begins with a foot bath and reflexology, followed by the Tomoko Couples' Massage. This signature rubdown incorporates aromatherapy, attention to pressure points, hot stones, and Swedish strokes. After what our tester calls a "delicate, mind-melding face massage from the eye sockets to the jawline," meant to rebalance internal energy, you and your partner can enjoy a dip in the hinoki tub or take a shower using Terra Pure Organics products.

Our tester says If you need a good reason to rise from your rattan lounger facing the ahhh-inspiring view of the monumental red rock cliffs of southwestern Utah, the resort spa's Art of Touch massage from Clarins won't disappoint. To deliver its three levels of touch—starting with light and calming, then advancing to deep and targeted—pro aestheticians use thumbs. palms, elbows, and forearms to apply pressure. With an aromatherapy assist from herbal Clarins fragrances (which are misted in the air) and a mini-facial incorporating the brand's Super Restorative Replenishing Comfort Mask ($65; clarins.com), the treatment is a full-body reboot. In a spa bungalow you can delight in the El Segundo Blue, a body treatment designed to calm the nerves and cleanse toxins using an algae-based paste. The hour-and-a-half session kicks off with a 30-minute lymphatic-touch massage with essential oils and picks up with a targeted shoulder and scalp massage. AWILI SPA AND SALON AT ANDAZ MAUI AT WAILEA RESORT

3550 Wailea Alanui Dr. 808-573-1234

Our tester says Before a treatment begins at this tropical oasis, you can mix your ideal massage oil with the spa's custom Omakase Apothecary Blending Experience. Our tester loved crafting her "fresh and slightly musky" blend, combining things like chamomile (for calming sensitive skin) and green tea oil (for its antioxidant properties), before a respite in the relaxation room (with a Jacuzzi "big enough to swim in"). Once the massage began with its symphony of lomilomi strokes (which are long and fluid) punctuated by pressure-point kneading, our tester felt her attention to aromatherapy waning in favor of tension-obliterating relief. "It worked out kinks I didn't even know I had."

Answering the door in ripped jeans and a T, Darden extends her warm, inviting manner from greeting to good-bye. After cleansing with a vibrating Foreo Luna

SKIN LAUNDRY

3 W. 16th St. 646-760-9298

Our tester says With a clean all-white interior that feels more modern loft than medispa, Skin Laundry offers a single 10-minute laser and light-based facial for those seeking results-oriented skin care in a time-starved world. The pore-cleaning treatment uses just two technologies—a YAG laser and IPL (intense pulsed light)—and each can have short- and long-term benefits, depending on whether you get a single treatment or a series of them. In one facial, dirt and bacteria are literally zapped away, leaving skin looking eventoned. With repeat visits, you may notice dark spots, lines, and pores are less visible. Tea and truffles meet you in the soaring, Architectural Digest-worthy space done in calming blues, lavender, and gray. The treatment room boasts a wall of windows, and our tester left the curtains wide open during her service. THE SPA ON RODEO

421 N. Rodeo Dr., Suite G13 424-284-8040

Our tester says Founded by foot and ankle surgeon Bobby Pourziaee, the spa crafts pampering yet highly effective services. The 150-minute Rodeo Manicure and Pedicure, delivered in the soothing, bamboo-filled spa, starts with a recline in a roomy leather chair and a foot soak in a beveled copper basin. After feet and hands have rested in an herbal tea and coconut milk blend to soften, pros apply DMK's retexturizing enzyme mask (for professional use only), then offer a reflexology session, as well as a foot dip in paraffin wax to leave skin as supple as a newborn baby's cheeks. Our tester says Which polish is right for you? Find out in this bright nail-art studio tucked off a busy retail strip on West Pico Boulevard, where an astrological reading leads you to your most fortuitous hues. (Only in L.A., kids.) Resident color expert and astrologer Rose Theodora walks you through your natal chart, then helps you pick resonating shades from the shop's lacquer wall, on which sit hundreds of shiny traditional and gel formulas from CND, OPI, Presto, and RGB, organized according to star signs. Theodora told our tester to go with purple, a shade that could be a "catalyst" for the career change she saw on her Libra chart. While our reporter chatted with Theodora, nail pro Noemi Diaz went to work. She filed our tester's nails into flattering squoval shapes before creating an ombré effect by brushing stripes of OPI's the Berry Thought of You and the deep-plum Skating on Thin Ice-Land ($10 each; ulta.com) onto a makeup sponge, then lightly pressing the sponge onto nails. The glossy results went unchipped for 10 days, collecting Likes along the way.

THRONE ON RODEO

421 N. Rodeo Dr., Suite 5A 310-734-7372

Our tester says Zen, schmen. The vibe of this new Rodeo Drive spa is rocker chic, with a major bass line pulsing through the black, white, and red walls. The focus is on glamming up brows, lashes, and makeup. And for killer arches, look no further than pro Makilia (Kai) Adams. Fifteen minutes in her chair will fix any asymmetry and, in our tester's situation, produce a flattering curved shape where flatness once reigned. After a consultation, Adams traces her suggested silhouette with a highlighter pencil (our reporter appreciated this "no surprises" approach). Also unique: She waxes in micro areas, generally using about four strips per brow. This allows Adams more control and elicits fewer tears from you. At her small and inviting spa, Renella not only makes over neglected sets (as was the case for our tester) but also doles out helpful tips for managing arches on your own. After cleaning up our tester's mismatched pair and filling out her "too thin" ends, Renella pointed out the "pluck and no-pluck" zones (tweeze just above eyelids, not above arches) for the thickest-looking results.

Our tester says You've heard of a blow-dry bar, right? Now meet Heydey, Manhattan's new facial bar. They offer a single treatment in a 30- or 50-minute session—a basic, effective facial (which includes a cleanse, exfoliation, and a mask) that you can squeeze into your regular schedule. Choose between two types: hydrating and calming, or detoxing and cleansing. For our tester with admittedly congested pores, aesthetician Jill Kibildis took a comprehensive approach, complete with a double-cleanse, an exfoliation, and a dead-cell-shedding Naturopathica enzyme peel. With anti-aging serums and an antioxidant mask thrown in, the "quickie" facial delivered the full Monty. Our tester praised everything from "the chill environment and Kibildis's skillful effleurage motions" to the follow-up email she received an hour after her appointment, filled with product recommendations.

Our tester says The name is a nod to the fairy-tale character of lustrous, long locks—and a hint as to the type of services you'll find here. It's a modern, all-white blow-dry bar ($40 per blowout) and a salon that specializes in the application of extensions (made of human hair). You can buy a 16-piece clip-in set ($250) or a collection of pieces that are "glued" in place with a handheld ultrasound device. Our tester arrived with a lob and left with "mermaid waves that reached to my elbows." The most surprising part? "My husband didn't even realize I had extensions. He just said, 'Your hair looks really good!'"

Regular price: $250 for 16-piece clip-in extensions and a blowout InStyle deal: $200

HOW TO MASTER

EDITOR'S TUCK

Steal this trick from fashion insiders to top off dresses and jackets with an air of effortless cool.

STEP 2 Tuck the excess under the part around your waist and pull it up.

STEP 3 Guide the end through the loop you've created; tug all the way down so it'll stay in place. Voilà—instant allure!

ofía Vergara had her first taste of fame 26 years ago. She didn't like it one bit.

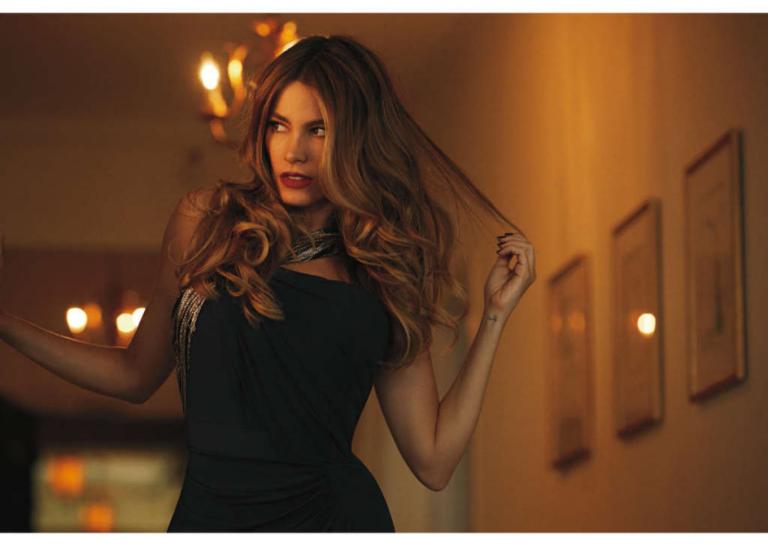

"I was 17 and fresh-squeezed," laughs the 43-yearold actress and businesswoman, a massive star in Latin markets who crossed over to mainstream American television a mere six years ago as the lively, curvaceous, and hilarious Gloria Delgado-Pritchett on Modern Family. "I wanted nothing to do with all that."

At the time, Sofía Margarita Vergara, known as Toty to her three brothers and sisters and endless close cousins, was a student at a Catholic girls' school in Barranquilla, Colombia, a port city and the birthplace of both the pop singer Shakira and the infamous North Coast drug cartel. Vergara's mom was a homemaker; her dad owned a cattle ranch. In storybook fashion, the long-limbed local beauty was discovered by a photographer while she was walking on a beach. "I was going to nun school, and they were very strict. I didn't want to model," she says. "But my mom forced me."

Vergara ended up in a lighthearted spot for Pepsi that featured her at a crowded public beach skipping gingerly across the sunbaked sand, shedding items of clothing as she went—the payoff was a tiny, hot lavender bikini and a sweaty, cold bottle of soda. The commercial became a sensation all over Latin America. Vergara was instantly famous, mobbed by well-wishers and fans wherever she went.

"I became, like, huge," she says over tea at the Peninsula Beverly Hills hotel. "I had offers for TV shows and movies in Colombia, and for all these commercials. And I was like, What? I just wanted

Well documented by now is Vergara's brief first marriage to said boyfriend and her decision to drop out of dental school. Sensing an opportunity lost, she mustered her courage and her toddler son and moved to the big city of Bogotá to give showbiz a whirl. She may not have liked it so much the first time around—the bright lights accenting every flaw, the strangers acting too familiar—but she knew she'd be foolish not to give it a try. "When I got divorced I had to start thinking, What am I going to do for my son?"

Today Vergara is Forbes magazine's top-earning television actress. The four-time Emmy nominee reportedly makes more than $300,000 per episode on Modern Family, and her crossover appeal to both Latinos and non-Latinos has led to lucrative endorsement and licensing deals with CoverGirl, Head & Shoulders, Kay Jewelers, and Rooms to Go.

As co-founder of Latin World Entertainment, a talent management and entertainment marketing firm, Vergara oversees a multimillion-dollar empire that includes a Spanish-language tech news site. Important to note is LWE's successful effort some years ago to provide representation to on-air talent at entertainment giant Univision, where Vergara made her mark throughout the Spanish-speaking world as the host of talk and travel shows—the former often involving interviews with politicians, the latter often involving the wearing of bikinis.

Add to this her upcoming marriage to 38-year-old True Blood and Magic Mike XXL hunk Joe Manganiello, a recent movie with Reese Witherspoon (Hot Pursuit), and the graduation this past spring of her son, Manolo, from Emerson College and you get the idea that her decision to reset her life so many years ago proved to be a sound one. (Perhaps the only losers in her success story are the generations of Barranquilla residents who missed out on the chance to occupy her dental chair.)

"I always wanted to have money and be able to help my family and support my son," Vergara says. "That was my whole objective since I started work. I wanted to have a business. And then over time it became fun."

he jasmine tea is served in silver pots with silver strainers. A prim woman in evening clothes plucks the strings of a beautifully carved harp. Four buttery scones sit on a white china plate accompanied by homemade jams in ramekins. Here and there, women surrounded by shopping bags pass the afternoon at high tea. Light filters through the greenery outside the tall windows. Vergara comes here often, a little spot off the hotel's lobby known as the Living Room. We are secreted in a private corner at her usual table.

On this hot July day Vergara is wearing a loose-fitting floral summer dress in black, cream, and coral by A.L.C.

Beneath the four-top is a pair of classic Louboutins. "I'm always in high heels," says the 5-foot-7 Vergara, "so that's my uniform." Her unusual, light-colored eyes seem to change hue with the environment-hazel in many pictures, luminous amber now. An orange Hermès bag occupies an empty chair.

Although she has dressed down a bit for our 4:30 meeting, Vergara is well known for a signature formfitting look that highlights her natural assets—a result of Colombia's heritage of rich genetic material, she explains. Her skin is smooth, her lips full; her large smile, accentuated by the cameras in a way reminiscent of Julia Roberts's, is a dazzling white-she laughs easily and often, her chuckle throaty and infectious. Vergara's main style influence, she says, is a woman cut from a similar mold.

"Sophia Loren has never been a slave to fashion," Vergara says. Her accent in person is less pronounced than the one she uses on TV. When she started Modern Family, she says, she exaggerated the accent and dyed her hair a darker shade to accommodate the sensibilities of American viewers. As the show has progressed, however, she has gone back to her natural honey color, if not to her natural speaking voice.

"Sophia knows what looks good on her. She is always very glamorous and well put together. She dresses for her body type, which for me is very important. Sometimes people tweet, 'Why is she [Vergara] always in the same kind of mermaid dresses?' Well, it's because that's what looks good on me. It holds my boobs. There are many dresses that are spectacular on a model, but I can't pull them off. I wear what's right for me."

Usually, she says, "I go for the Italian designers because they think more about being voluptuous and sexy, and that's what I like. I always head straight to Cavalli, Dolce & Gabbana. Sometimes I am dressed by amazing designers, but the clothes are designed for girls who are taller or flatter. I have to alter them. So if I want to do something easy, I just go for stuff I know will fit."

Around her neck is a brand-new bauble from Manganiello, a black opal in a circle of diamonds he bought for her in Australia the day before her birthday. Epically, he arrived home in L.A. in time to present it to her. Photos on Vergara's Instagram account display the six birthday cakes brought by her friends, who are well aware of her sweet tooth. On her finger is another recent gift: a 7-plus-carat cushion-cut engagement ring she received during a Hawaiian vacation last Christmas.

Vergara and Manganiello met in 2014 at the White House Correspondents' Association dinner in Washington, D.C., shortly before her breakup with fiancé Nick Loeb. A widely circulated photo from the event caught the 6-foot-5 Manganiello-also a Catholicschool kid and a former standout athlete who went on to study theater at the prestigious Carnegie Mellon University School of Drama-in deep contemplation of Vergara's celebrated rear.

LARGER THAN LIFE

Take a five-second scroll through the star's Instagram feed and it's pretty clear why she didn't stick with dentistry.

BIG ROCK "It is perfection," says Vergara of the giant ring she received from fiancé Joe Manganiello. "He picked it for me, and I wouldn't change anything. He knows that I like big!

BIG MAN "I am always looking to have fun. I mean, what am I gonna do, take it seriously? My fiancé's in a stripper movie. It's his job. He works hard for that body. Everybody wants him to show it off."

BIG MOMENT Manolo majored in film and minored in history. "I told him, 'You have to go to college, and then you can do whatever the hell you want.' He's gonna start looking for work in the movie industry."

BIG HONOR "When I called [co-star] Ed O'Neill to invite him to my Hollywood Walk of Fame ceremony, he was like, 'How did you get a star so fast?' And I was like, 'I don't know, Ed. Maybe because I have huge tits?"

"I didn't want to go out with him for a long time because I thought he was too good-looking," Vergara says. "Like, it's too much work, and I'm older. I'm 43 years old. I don't want to deal with a guy that every girl is after, you know?

"But then I gave him a chance. I realized he's not like a typical handsome guy. He's not vain. He's very serious, very straightforward, very easy. Also, he doesn't drink. So that's great because he doesn't like to go out partying. And he can sit around a dinner table for hours with my family. He talks s- and drinks Colombian coffee."

A fall wedding is planned. An accomplished delegator in both her business and personal life, Vergara says she has hired a wedding planner. "The only thing I know for sure is it's going to happen, and it's going to be a big wedding because I have a big family. For me it's going to be like a red-carpet appearance. I'm just going to show up."

Having spent the past two decades as a single woman, she says she finds "getting married very exciting. I got married when I was very young. It's a different situation now. I'm 20 years older. I've lived another lifetime already. And it's Joe's first marriage, so he's very excited also. The only problem is the guest list."

That laugh again. You figure she'll work out the arrangements.

In due time the delicious, crumbly scones are slathered in strawberry jam. As it inevitably does, the talk of a wedding, a first-time husband, a dress-not yet determined but definitely something simple because "I'm an old bride," she says—turns to the inevitable. Are there any thoughts of an addition to la familia Vergara-Manganiello?

Not missing a beat, Vergara smiles and walks carefully through an answer. In late May, Loeb was granted permission by a court to file a revised lawsuit seeking custody of frozen embryos created by the couple in 2013 using Loeb's sperm and Vergara's eggs. Vergara has said through lawyers that she wished to leave the embryos frozen indefinitely but not destroyed. A previous contract specified that the embryos could be brought to term only with the consent of both parties.

Lamenting the fact that something so private must be argued by lawyers-and discussed with journalists-Vergara says, "This is a contract that we did-there's no issue. You signed a contract. You cannot just now, because you hate the other person, be like, 'No, that's not what I wanted.' I'm sorry, but when we decided, we decided. It's not like anybody was drinking or anything. He knew what he was doing, and now suddenly it's like ..." Her voice trails off. "So we're just waiting to see. I don't think it's going to go anywhere."

As it is, Vergara says candidly, childbirth is a tricky issue right now for a number of reasons.

"I'm really borderline at my age to do it," she says. "And if I'm going to do it, I would need a surrogate. I have a fibroid. I don't even feel it, but supposedly it's exactly where an egg would get implanted. I don't have enough eggs left to mess around and try it naturally and see what happens. I'll need help. But I don't mind; it's fine."

As if to cleanse her palate of the tricky subject matter, Vergara takes a last sip of tea and eats a last bite of scone. Then she stands up to leave. There is an emergency at the house she shares with Manganiello and Manolosomething necessitating a sprinkler repairman. The soft light from the big windows behind her illuminates her silhouette. Seeing her there, aglow in the late afternoon light and speaking of a domestic drama to be faced, I get the sudden notion that Vergara's next chapter would make a great sitcom.

There would be the sensitive actor husband, absolutely ripped, typecast as a fantasy sex object but with the chops and ambition for meatier roles. The young stepson trying to make his way in the zany and difficult world of Hollywood film production. And first among equals, the gorgeous Colombian wife, famous and stunning and fabulously wealthy, the co-founder of a business empire, taking a run at happiness the second time around.

Maybe they'll talk about a baby for Season 2. ■

What She Ate:

Liberated, a pasta made of kelp.

Where You've Seen Her:

Marling caused a Sundance eclipse in 2011 when she burst onto the scene as the writer and protagonist of the low-budget sci-fi movie Another Earth. Since then she's appeared as an antiterrorist operative (The East) and a cult leader (Sound of My Voice).

Where You'll See Her Next:

The 32-year-old stars as a Civil War-era heroine in The Keeping Room (September 25). She and her creative partner, Zal Batmanglij (the brother of Vampire Weekend frontman Rostam Batmanglij), are also writing The OA, an upcoming drama series for Netflix.

LinkedIn Updates:

"For The Keeping Room I had to learn how to ride horses, chop wood, and shoot black-powder guns. There is a guy out in the Valley who specializes in these kinds of old-timey skills, so I went to him."

The Quote: "What drew me to The Keeping Room is that we're used to seeing women appropriate male violence. Think of the female ninja who can drop 47 male assassins and not break a nail. That's a male fantasy. In this film young women fight back in ways that are actually possible." —SARAH MESLE

DIOR À

TERESA PALMER

"It all started here, really," says Teresa Palmer of the Côte d'Azur. In 2006, rave reviews at the Cannes Film Festival for her performance in the unsettling indie film 2:37 set the young Australian actress on a path toward stardom. "I didn't realize the whirlwind that was about to take place in my life," Palmer says. Whirlwinds are now routine for the 29-year-old star, whose recent work includes the reimagined Point Break (out on Christmas), Triple 9 (John Hillcoat's 2016 cop thriller), and her adorable 1-year-old son, Bodhi, currently grabbing at a reporter's shiny tape recorder. "I've done six films since he was born," she explains. "That was the deal I made with myself. If I could have my son with me when I worked, including on fashion shoots, then I would." Even when she was 20 feet under the sea without an air tank for a scene in Point Break, Bodhi helped: "I reminded myself, You got through a natural birth, you've got this."

ODEYA RUSH

It's her 18th birthday, and not much has changed for Odeya Rush. "I can vote now," she says—the only thing she can come up with that feels different. "I'm going to vote in the next election, so that's really cool." Even before her breakout performance in last year's dystopian drama The Giver, Rush, who grew up in a family of six brothers, has displayed a certain self-confidence that belies her youth. Maybe it's the result of fending for herself or navigating Hollywood after moving to the States from her native Israel at age 9. She has proved herself adept. Next up, for example, is this month's familyfriendly Goosebumps, in which she plays the daughter of horror author R.L. Stine (Jack Black) and chases down monsters with co-stars Ryan Lee and Dylan Minnette, actors her own age. "That was the most fun I've had on a set," she says. And what gives her goose bumps? "Music," Rush says. "A strong voice can give you chills all over. If I could just have Adele's voice, I would be the biggest rock star." —ERIC WILSON

MAN OF STYLE

HROTTLE

Equally at ease on a chopper or on the big screen, ruggedly handsome new father RYAN REYNOLDS is on the ride of his life

My dad's a cop.
My brother's a cop. Growing up in a conservative blue-collar family, you have to learn how to cut your own path.
You learn to survive.

CALVIN KLEIN JEANS Denim jeans. Vintage T-shirt from Early Halloween NYC.

ith its weathered shingles and white picket railings, Shutters on the Beach is so New England it hurts. But for all its East Coast allure, the renowned Santa Monica hotel is flanked by palm trees, swarmed by Rollerbladers, and steps away from the sand. Call it Cape Cod on the California coast. Every window is a study in blue, and so too is Ryan Reynolds. In a blue Officine Générale shirt. blue Nudie jeans, and natural white Converse sneakers, he perfectly matches the view. "I actually like L.A. a lot more now that I don't live here," the New Yorkbased actor muses in his distinctive, even tone. His voice, like Jack Nicholson's, never seems to rise or fall. His career is another story.

Reynolds soared to considerable heights opposite Sandra Bullock in 2009's workplace rom-com The Proposal. But like another captive of the genre, Matthew McConaughey, Reynolds admits to wrestling with what to do with his star power. "I made a lot of choices that were driven by the word 'should,'" he reflects, contemplating his San Pellegrino. "But the ones that are most satisfying are driven by the words 'I want.'" Falling in the latter category, Mississippi Grind (out September 25) promises more than just satisfaction. With early raves for his deeply moving performance as Curtis, a charismatic drifter burdened by good luck, the film might do for Reynolds what Dallas Buyers Club did for McConaughey. This month, let the anticipated Reynoldsaissance begin.

Many of your characters, from Van Wilder to Mississippi Grind's Curtis, exude outsize amounts of confidence. Do you relate?

Oh, I know how to play that in a film, but I don't have that kind of swagger in my life. My insecurityto-confidence ratio is 90:10. I can kind of turn it on, but it's not me. Do you remember your first date? Christine. She was very pretty and a grade older than me. A year's difference in high school is a chasm you can't bridge. I might as well have been 20 years younger. She wanted to go to this restaurant in Vancouver that I hadn't even heard of. I didn't know if I had enough to pay for the dinner, so I faked a stomachache and only ate the bread. I just made the bill with a really crappy tip. I remember I wore, like, a hideous '90s poncho. Not a full-on Mexican poncho. It had a weird tapestry in the front and a hood attached. She was dressed like she was going to the Met Ball.

Your style has definitely evolved since then. Do you have a style icon? I do for movies. For Mississippi Grind, which has a '70s vibe, I looked to Robert Redford, But Marlon Brando had fantastic style. Even into his later years, when he just rocked muumuus.

You're the youngest of four brothers. Was acting a response to that? One hundred percent. When you're the youngest of four aggressive males, your defense mechanism isn't going to be your fists—it's going to be something else. My mind is the thing that got me through it without too many broken bones. One of the reasons I started performing was just to get out of the house.

Anna Boden and Ryan Fleck wrote and directed Mississippi Grind and Half Nelson. Both films star handsome Canadian actors named Ryan. I did have a joke with them. My character breaks his nose in the movie, and I said, "I kind of look like Gosling now." We were shooting in the streets of New Orleans, and as soon as I had that nose on, everybody who walked up to me asked if I was Gosling.

Mississippi Grind tells the story of two gamblers—one with good luck, one with bad—making a run south in a Subaru hatchback. What's the craziest road trip you've ever been on?

I once tried to ride a motorcycle from Sydney to Perth, Australia. It ended three weeks into it with a crash and a few other problems. I got bitten by some sort of spider that gave me the worst infection you've ever seen in your life. My friend totaled his bike. He split it in half. It's amazing that he walked away from it.

Your character says he's so good at gambling because he doesn't care about "winning." Seems an apt description for where you are these days, going all in on the projects you're passionate about.

In certain parts of my life I take big risks. I'll take a risk in film, definitely. There's nothing I wouldn't want to play if it spoke to me in some way. And I'll do stunts that I shouldn't do. But I don't take risks like living wildly beyond my means. Or risks with my family—I would never do that. Did you and your co-star, Ben Mendelsohn, gamble at all during filming at these backwoods casinos and small racetracks?

Far too much. I actually had to have an intervention with Ben.

He wasn't just getting Method-y? He is Method-y, but he was starting to go down the rabbit hole a little bit. And that's an easy place to go. Last December you had a baby, a daughter named James. You and your wife, Blake Lively, also have names that work for both men and women. Was that your inspiration? To some degree. James is my father. And James is Blake's great-grandfather. People probably thought it was this unorthodox choice, but I didn't see it as that at all. You know, we didn't name her Butternut Summer Squash or Honeydew Meadowlark or some crazy celebrity name.

What's next for you?

Right now I'm just finishing up editing for the superhero movie Deadpool [out February 2016]. That's why I'm in L.A. I don't know what's after that. I'm trying to figure it out. Hopefully nothing for a while. I do work a lot, but it's hard to stop.

Because you have this momentum? What I have is a 10-month-old baby. This is the time when all her firsts are happening. I want to be there for them, and you can't do that from a film set in Prague. Has fatherhood changed you? I fall victim to every cliché. I can't actually imagine my life without this little person whom I get to hold and care for. I don't know if some of that is also biologythere's a physiological response to having a child that creates this new reality. It's caused me more anxiety than I've ever imagined. Global, social issues: They become imperatively relevant. I've always been an environmentalist, but now I'm like, I want my daughter to have a planet where she can breathe. ■

WILD MUSHROOM

and Sage Casarecci

BY NANCY & SARA JENKINS

Super-foodie mother-daughter duo Nancy Harmon Jenkins, whose 1994 Mediterranean Diet cookbook pioneered a movement, and N.Y.C. chef Sara Jenkins, of the pasta haven Porsena, swear by this mouthwatering recipe. Like the dishes in their new cookbook, The Four Seasons of Pasta, it's elegantly rustic. The flavor and aromas of the squash and smoky mushrooms "just spell autumn," says Nancy. Casarecci, a rolled noodle, captures every bit of sauce, but any short variety will do-Sara favors the artisanal brand Rustichella d'Abruzzo ($17/18 oz.; amazon.com) for the pasta's clingy, rough surfaces.

SERVES 4-6 TOTAL TIME 1 hour, 20 minutes

- cup fresh bread crumbs
- tbsp extra-virgin olive oil, divided Sea salt
- Freshly ground black pepper 11/2 lb. butternut squash, peeled, seeded, and cut into 1/2-inch chunks
- lb. mixed wild mushrooms, such as chanterelles, stemmed shiitakes, and cremini, trimmed and quartered
- tbsp unsalted butter
- cup chopped yellow onion
- tbsp minced garlic
- tbsp minced fresh ginger
- cup dry white wine
- cup chicken broth or water
- cup plain Greek yogurt
- tbsp chopped fresh sage leaves, plus more for garnish
- lb. dried casarecci (or short pasta)
- cup grated Parmesan, for serving

1 Preheat oven to 350°F. 2 On a small baking sheet, spread bread crumbs. Drizzle with 1 tbsp olive oil and season with salt and pepper; toast until browned, about 7 minutes. Transfer to a bowl. 3 In a pot, heat 3 tbsp olive oil over moderately high heat. Sauté squash with a pinch of salt and pepper. Cook, stirring, until tender, browned, and crisp, 8-10 minutes. Transfer to a bowl. 4 Heat 2 tbsp olive oil in the same pot, add mushrooms, and season with salt and pepper; cook until tender and browned, 8 minutes. Transfer to the bowl with squash. 5 Reduce heat to low. In the same pot, melt butter with 2 tbsp olive oil; add onion, garlic, and ginger. Cook, stirring, until the onion softens, about 5 minutes. 6 Stir in wine and broth; bring to a boil. Simmer over moderate heat until slightly reduced, about 5 minutes. 7 Reduce heat; stir in yogurt. Add mushrooms, squash, and sage, and toss. Remove from heat, cover, and keep warm. 8 Meanwhile, bring a large pot of salted water to a boil; cook pasta until al dente. Drain, reserving 1/4 cup liquid. 9 Add pasta to the pot and toss with sauce (add some pasta water to loosen if dry). Season with salt and pepper. 10 Serve with sage, bread crumbs, and Parmesan sprinkled on top.

ROAST SQUASH

and Quinoa Bowls BY HEIDI SWANSON

San Francisco cookbook author and food blogger Heidi Swanson has built a reputation on turning healthy into delicious. And this innovative quinoa dish, which combines tender squash with crunchy pepitas, is no exception. A yogurt dressing spiked with ginger, cilantro, and serrano chile adds a dollop of decadent flavor. "Take time to focus on getting the seasoning right by using enough salt and lime juice as you prepare the various ingredients," advises Swanson, whose latest book, Near & Far, comes out this fall. "I also like to serve it with a poached egg on top for a one-bowl meal.'

SERVES 4-6 TOTAL TIME 1 hour, 15 minutes

- cups plain Greek yogurt
- cup loosely packed cilantro leaves 3/4
- cup loosely packed baby spinach leaves
- cup chopped scallion greens (from about 6 scallions)
- serrano chile, seeded and chopped

- tbsp minced fresh ginger Freshly ground black pepper
- cup raw pepitas (pumpkin seeds) tbsp plus 1 tsp extra-virgin olive oil,
- divided lb. acorn or delicata squash, halved, seeded, and sliced 1/4-inch thick
- cups red quinoa, rinsed and drained
- tsp smoked paprika
- cup fresh lime juice

1 Preheat oven to 400°F. 2 In a blender, purée yogurt, cilantro, spinach, scallions, chile, and ginger; salt and pepper to taste. Transfer to a bowl; chill. 3 Spread pepitas on a baking sheet. Drizzle with 1 tsp olive oil and season with salt and pepper. Toast for 5 minutes, until browned. Transfer to a bowl; set aside. 4 On the same baking sheet, spread squash. Drizzle with 2 tbsp olive oil and season with salt and pepper. Roast for 20 minutes, turning slices halfway through, until tender. 5 Meanwhile, in a medium saucepan, combine quinoa and 23/4 cups water; boil. Reduce heat to moderately low, cover, and cook until water is absorbed, about 20 minutes. Remove from heat; let stand, covered, for 5 minutes. Fluff quinoa with a fork. 6 In a small bowl, whisk 3 tbsp olive oil with paprika. Season with salt and pepper. 7 Spoon quinoa into four bowls. Top with yogurt sauce, squash, and pepitas. Drizzle with paprika oil and lime juice.

TUSCAN KALE

and Root Vegetable Ribollita

BY MISSY ROBBINS

Missy Robbins, who rocked the New York food scene during her five years at the helm of the modern Italian eatery A Voce, is back in action with Lilia, a new pastacentric restaurant in Williamsburg, Brooklyn. Sure to top her fall menu: a veggie-loaded Tuscan stew, hearty with chunks of bread, carrots, tomatoes, and earthy root vegetables. "Let it cook nice and slow," Robbins says. "This is not a dish to rush." While you don't want to overcook the vegetables, she adds, ribollita is better made a day or two ahead, giving all those heady flavors ample time to blend.

SERVES 4–6 ACTIVE TIME 1 hour TOTAL TIME 2 hours

- lb. country-style sourdough bread, torn into 1-inch pieces (about 4 cups)
- cup extra-virgin olive oil, plus more for serving medium onion, chopped garlic cloves, thinly sliced

- small celery root, peeled and cut into ½-inch cubes (about 2 cups)
 - small carrots, peeled and cut into 1/2-inch cubes (about ½ cup)
 - medium parsnips, peeled and cut into ½-inch cubes (about 1½ cups)
 - tsp crushed red pepper 28 oz. can crushed San Marzano
 - tomatoes
- bunch flat-leaf parsley
- rosemary sprig
- sage sprig
- thyme sprigs

- 1/4-lb. piece Parmesan rind
- lb. Tuscan kale, stems removed and leaves torn (about 4 cups, loosely packed)
- 15 oz. can gigante beans, rinsed and drained Sea salt
- Freshly ground black pepper cup grated Parmesan

1 Preheat oven to 200°F. 2 Spread torn bread on a rimmed baking sheet; bake until crisp but not browned, about 1 hour. (Or simply dry the bread on the baking sheet, uncovered, overnight.) 3 Meanwhile, heat olive oil in a large stockpot over low heat. Add onion and cook, stirring, until softened and translucent, about 7 minutes. Add garlic and cook, stirring, until fragrant, about 2 minutes. Stir in root vegetables, red pepper, and tomatoes. 4 Gather parsley, rosemary, sage, and thyme into a bunch and tie with kitchen twine. Add to the pot along with the Parmesan rind. Add enough water to cover the vegetables (about 8 cups); bring to a simmer over moderately high heat. 5 Cover and reduce the heat to low; simmer until vegetables are tender, about 45 minutes. 6 Discard herb bundle and Parmesan rind. 7 Stir in kale and beans. Cook until kale is wilted and beans are heated through, about 15 minutes. 8 Stir in dried bread until it's soaked; season with salt and pepper. Ladle into bowls and drizzle with olive oil. Serve with grated Parmesan.

The sweetest moment of your day.

simplicity means following two rules: Arrange the apples deliberately so that the cake looks pretty when you turn it out, and don't overbake it, she says, or "you lose the custardy texture."

SERVES 8-10 ACTIVE TIME 20 minutes
TOTAL TIME 1 hour, 5 minutes, plus cooling

- tbsp unsalted butter, cut into 1/2-inch cubes, plus more for greasing 1½ cups all-purpose flour, plus more for
- dusting 1½ tsp baking powder

- apple, peeled, cored, and cut lengthwise into ¼-inch slices
- large egg yolk
- tbsp heavy cream
- tbsp granulated sugar
- tsp pure vanilla extract
- tbsp turbinado sugar, for sprinkling

For the cake: 1 Position a rack in the center of the oven; preheat to 350°F. 2 Butter a 9-inch tube pan and dust with flour, making sure the center tube is well-coated; tap out excess flour and set aside. 3 In a medium bowl, whisk flour, baking powder, and salt. 4 In a measuring cup, mix milk and cream. 5 In the bowl of a stand mixer fitted with a paddle attachment, beat the back of a spoon.

For the topping: 1 Arrange apple slices on the surface of the cake (gently press into the batter, but don't submerge them). 2 In a small bowl, whisk egg yolk, cream, granulated sugar, and vanilla; drizzle over apple slices. 3 Sprinkle turbinado sugar evenly over the cake. 4 Bake for about 45 minutes, until top is golden and a toothpick inserted comes out clean. Cool cake completely on a wire rack. 5 Run a small offset spatula around edge of the cake and center tube to loosen. Place a 10-inch plate over the cake pan; quickly flip the pan and the plate, then lift off the tube pan. Place a serving plate over the cake; flip again so that the cake is right side up.

Any suggestions for some cute non-candy alternatives I can pass out this Halloween?

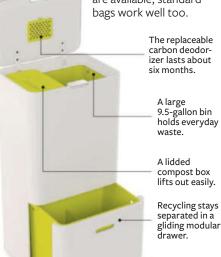

Replace the sugar-packed sweets with these playful, longer-lasting treats. A light-up ring ($2; glowsource .com) gives little princesses extra sparkle and serves double duty as a reflector after sunset. A stockpile of assorted temporary tattoos lets kids trade with their siblings and buddies just as they would with their candy haul. We love the adorable, fresh designs from Meri Meri ($2/2; merimeri .com). An affordable yet stylish mask ($20/12; orientaltrading.com) will thrill children and make their adult chaperones jealous. Good thing they come in a range of sizes.

My trash and recycling situation is a mess. Can you share some streamlining strategies?

Keep everything in one place with Totem ($249; containerstore .com), the genius new garbage-sorting system from Joseph Joseph. Multiple chambers make organizing effortless, and the sleek, powder-coated frame fits seamlessly into a modern home. Lightweight bins pop out for cleaning, bins pop out for cleaning, and while custom-fit liners are available, standard bags work well too.

I Am That Girl . . . Mindy Kaling

For our new column, InStyle has partnered with the nonprofit organization I Am That Girl. We want to chat frankly with celebrities about issues affecting girls' self-esteem. This month Mindy Kaling sounds off on the upsides of being hypersensitive, the downsides of bumbling through junior high, and why projecting confidence is sometimes more important than always being 100 percent correct.

We all know people who are "style stars." But what we want to talk about today is the concept of inner style—qualities that make you feel unique and beautiful that have nothing to do with outward appearance. If you could name your greatest invisible accessory, what would it be? I think, for me, it's social IQ, a perceptiveness about how people are feeling in a social situation. I was a hypersensitive kid—one of those kids who just thought that everyone was judging and hating them. Most of the people I know who experienced that as children end up being writers. They find creative outlets where they can use that [sensitivity]—it's sort of like the gift that they're given later in life.

There has been a big push on the red carpet lately to "ask her more." As a writer, a producer, and an actress, what is your take? When I'm at an awards show—where every person has just spent three hours getting ready and putting on restrictive undergarments—I don't really expect thought-provoking questions. I will say this: In interviews that are not on the red carpet I do wish people asked me about the process of writing, about how we create the characters on the show, what it's like writing a book versus a screenplay or an essay versus stand-up comedy. That, to me, is very interesting. But instead I get asked a lot about confidence... People, especially in the media, are very suspicious of women who don't hate themselves. And by the way, I'm desperately neurotic. I care way too much about what everyone thinks of me. But in interviews I'm not like, every two seconds, incredulous [over my success]. I don't beat myself up or make apologies. If I were a man, no one would ever say, "It's weird that you have this job." But when you're an Indian woman, people are like, "Aren't you amazed?"

How has your perspective on self-esteem changed since you were in, say, junior high school? When I was younger, I was ruled by self-doubt, which I think is natural because I didn't know what I was good at. As you get older, you start to see that the world values things other than just being conventionally pretty or good at sports.

These days, do you ever still wrestle with feelings of self-doubt? Oh, absolutely. My friends make fun of my anxiety at parties. I'm 36, and when a lot of people in your circle have kids or are married and you aren't, that can be very intimidat-

"I don't beat myself up or make apologies." ing. The way I handle it is that I try to switch into the mind-set of, OK, everything will be good for a script. I'm lucky that I'm a writer. What do you think makes you a great leader? I've found that decisiveness and confidence are really important, sometimes more than being correct. I am guilty of overthinking things, but I've realized that keeping some of that to myself has helped with my success as a leader.

What is the best compliment anyone's ever given you? "I don't know how her mind works." I loved hearing that.

If you could give every girl in the world one piece of advice, what would it be? Never take naked photos of yourself. —EMILY GREENER, co-founder and CEO of I Am That Girl
